Advantages of investing in Greece's real estate

Greece has experienced a very severe economic crisis and its high external debt dictated austerity policy and harsh economic decrees, real estate prices across Greece fell by 70% of market prices compared with 2007.

In the last 2 years, according to national reports and the Greek economy performance, Greece has completely emerged from the crisis and the real estate market is already showing 30% recovery in prices increases.

The forecast is that in the next 5 years, the market will recover and real estate prices will return to 2007.

The economic crisis and Greece's recession opened up a perfect opportunity window for investment.

The leading sector in the economy is tourism. In 2018 the number of tourists entering the country reached about 32 million people (a growth rate of about 23% compared with 2017), who enjoy the amazing beaches and the country's long history.

The steady increase in the number of tourists visiting Greece each year is also due to geopolitical problems in competing markets such as Turkey and Egypt.

Between 2006 to 2017 the tourist population in Greece almost doubled.

Forecasts say that in 2028 the amount tourists visiting Greece will reach to 50 million.

Greece encourages investments in the country, and very convenient for real estate investments in particular.

Appreciation tax exemption on properties and property tax exemption are only small examples of a large spectrum of reliefs and benefits.

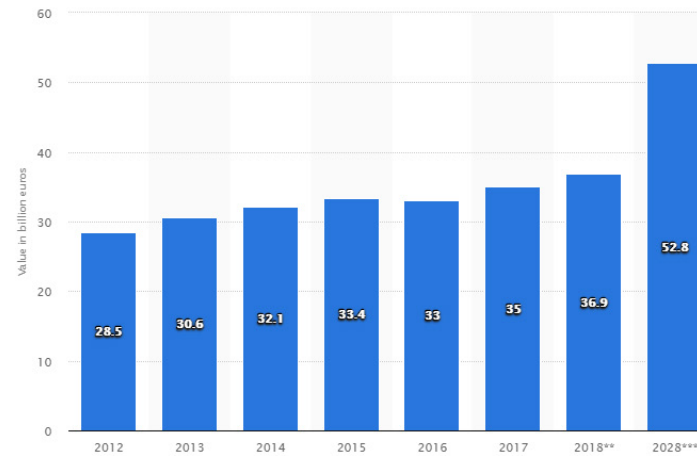

Purchase a property in Greece valued more than 250 thousand euros, gives entitlement to a Golden Visa - a five-year citizenship in Greece with an option to extend for an additional five years.

A benefit that attracts wealthy investors from all over the world. Beyond permanent residence Greece also provides free education for those investors.
